Barking

Dogs bark for a variety of reasons. They could be alerting you of an intruder (alarm barking), demanding your attention (request barking), trying to drive off something or someone they are afraid of (fear barking), or they may simply be bored (boredom barking). In order to control excessive barking, you must first figure out what type of barking you are dealing with.

Request Barking

Many dogs learn that barking gets them what they want (food, attention, door open, etc.). If this is the kind of barking your dog is exhibiting, you must teach him that the behavior no longer works. To do this, ignore your dog completely when he barks at you (or better yet - walk out of the room and close yourself behind a door until he is quiet). By removing the reinforcement (whatever it is he is used to getting when he barks) the behavior should disappear. Keep in mind, however, that because this behavior has worked for so long it may get worse before it disappears. It is very important that you DO NOT give in because this will only make the behavior stronger. Once he is quiet you can give him what he wants if it’s appropriate.

Fear barking

If your dog barks at something or someone out of fear you will have to work to change his emotions about the scary person or thing. This is called counter-conditioning. Get some really yummy treats (hotdogs, chicken, cheese). Set up scenarios in which the scary person or thing arrives on the scene, but is far enough away (or quiet enough if the scary thing is a sound) that your dog is aware of it but does not bark. Start giving him the treats when the scary thing comes into view (or is heard) and stop when it leaves or stops. Slowly have the person or thing get closer and closer (or louder and louder) while you are giving your dog the treats. Over time your dog should change his opinion about the person or thing he was afraid of because it will now predict great treats.

Boredom Barking

Your dog may be barking simply because she is bored. Increasing her physical and mental stimulation should help. Try the following suggestions:

1. Exercise her well every day. A walk is not always enough, play fetch or the recall game (having her run back and forth between two people) for 20 minutes.
2. Hide food around the house for her to search for.
3. Give her a toy stuffed with food (Kong toys or hollow marrow bones work well).
4. Practice simple obedience commands (sit, down, stay) every day.
5. Teach her some tricks and have her perform them every day.
6. Play 'hide and seek' with her toys.
7. Play 'hide and seek' with family members.
8. Leave a radio or T.V. on when you are gone.

Separation Anxiety

If your dog barks only when you are not home it’s possible that he is suffering from separation anxiety. Dogs with separation anxiety often show other signs that indicate that they are anxious about being alone. If your dog is overly attached to you and follows you from room to room, or if he shakes, pants or cries as you prepare to leave for the day he may indeed be suffering from separation anxiety. You should consult a behaviorist to help overcome the problem.

Alarm Barking

If your dog barks at intruders, like the mailman, delivery people, or neighbors walking by her property, most likely her barking stems from territorial behavior. Alarm barking is a natural behavior in dogs and we can’t expect to completely eliminate it, but we can learn to control it.

To deal with this type of barking you will need to teach your dog a ‘quiet’ command. Set up scenarios whereby someone walks past your house and triggers your dog to bark. After 3-4 barks, show your dog a really special treat (hotdogs, chicken, or cheese). When she stops barking to retrieve the treat say “quiet” and give her the treat. Repeat this until you have paired the word “quiet” with her silence a dozen or so times. Then try to use your quiet command to stop her barking without showing her the treat. If she learned the command, she will stop barking, and you can go ahead and give her the treat as a reward. Once she knows the cue “quiet” means shut up - start to increase the duration of quietness you require before you reward (just like teaching the stay command - add duration slowly). Dog barks - you say “quiet” - she shuts up - you count to 10 seconds in your head - then click and give the treat.
